The Condition of Education

Davis 2011 reports on a conceptual model developed by an associate degree program faculty when it identified the need for a curricular revision. The extent to which faculty members have a research role as part of their work responsibilities depends largely on the mission of the employing institution, with larger universities more likely to have research and knowledge creation as a significant part of their missions.

We also like to see proof of learning, not just attendance: for example, in our new Reading and Writing program, faculty must submit a redesigned writing assignment that incorporates best practice and consult with a Faculty Fellow in order to obtain the certificate. Faculty include professors, associate professors, assistant professors, instructors, lecturers, assisting professors, adjunct professors, and interim professors.
