The Church was weak, the Barbarians who weren't big into sculpture were strong, and cities were impoverished and uncultured. It was designed above all to express the majesty and power of Roman rule, thus aside from a number of magnificent historical reliefs eg. So the art of sculpture was back, albeit on a modest scale.

Modern sculpture

The late-20th century has witnessed a number of exceptional sculptors working in more or less traditional modes, albeit with a modernist conception.

Mannerist Sculpture 1530-1600 If the confidence and order of the High Renaissance period was reflected in its idealised forms of figurative sculpture, Mannerist sculpture reflected the chaos and uncertainty of a Europe racked by religious division and a Rome recently sacked and occupied by mercenary French soldiers. Postmodernist Contemporary Sculpture By 1970, an increasing amount of was becoming extremely experimental - art critics might say wacky, incomprehensible and kitsch-like. If Baroque sculpture was dramatic and serious, Rococo was all frills and no substance, although in reality it was not so much a different style from the Baroque but rather a variation on the style brought to fruition by Bernini and his contemporaries.
