CONSTRUCTIVISM THEORY OF LANGUAGE TEACHING AND LEARNING

People who learn to sign in adolescence or adulthood are very similar to people who learn a foreign language - they have an accent, and they never master the more arcane syntactic rules. However, it has to be said that without formal instruction we would not have as many learners in formal institutions learning languages that they would have never learnt, otherwise.

Theories of reading

The next session will be the description of constructivism through the history, definition, types, principles, implementation in teaching learning process, the characteristics of learning, the characters of learners, strength and weaknesses, differences of constructivism with other theories and the comparison between traditional to the constructivist one. Over the years from 2-7, when language is
