education

While at work, a large number of children are affected by numerous hazards. Most trade unions strategically target groups of workers that are relevant to their sectors of interest see above examples and, in this sense, the efforts within the unions are quite concentrated. An area where the national debate has developed significantly in the past decade is in the importance of linking workplace learning and trade union organising.

Trade union strategies to recruit new groups of workers

The National Union of Teachers NUT reported that the statutory system for the determination of pay and conditions for schoolteachers in England, in place since 1991, does not meet the requirements of Convention 98. Those employers of teachers that are local government bodies are not permitted to depart from the arrangements determined by the government.
