Almost half of healthcare employees are struggling to cope mentally due to the pandemic, a new report suggests. The findings reinforce the message of, a mental health awareness campaign launched by Nursing Times in April 2020 as the first wave took its toll on staff and is supported by Unison. There are some important sectors of the economy — large parts of the creative sector, for instance — that would in normal times be thriving, but which may suffer significant job losses and take time to recover fully.
