Fascist and Quasi

Last, but clearly not least, the swordsmiths who worked at the forges of the Yasukuni Jinja Nippon To Tanren Kai are well known to most collectors. After World War I, as Cohn points out, even well-informed Western observers e.

STILL MORE THOUGHTS ON GENDAITO Prepared for the Rochester Study Group, September 26, 1992, by Christopher Sly

The ashi in this sword are particularly pleasing.

The sword by Okimasa which is being displayed tonight is a fine example of a blade made in the Ichimonji style. Granted, they are reported to have mixed western steel with native not using it exclusively, however, the fact remains that western steel was thought correctly or not to have added something to the sword, and appears not to have lowered the practical or aesthetic value of swords for clients or collectors.

Suehiro “Gensai” Daiginjo Sake

He was saved and managed to escape together with Razen, but was instead killed by his savior as Razen took his body and abilities. He is famous for Bizen and Soshu styles as well as horimono, and is considered the greatest living smith.

Fascist and Quasi

He is said to have cut through the hips of a pig to demonstrate to Vice Admiral Oyamada how a sharp sword ought to cut. Most organizations make no such distinction, and typically the belt is worn red side up. The first in order of importance, today, is the Gassan line, starting with Gassan Sadayoshi, who Fujishiro lists as a josaku upper rank smith from the Ansei era 1854.

Fascist and Quasi

He is one of 6 gendai kaji listed by Honami Koson in Teiryō Yōji 1925. Such anti-Semitic views were by no means limited to Japan. This index is divided into two parts; known swords with star stamps on the nakago and a listing of Jumei Tosho smiths from literature sources.

Shogo Taguchi

In this context, title is a bit more accurate. The Yamada family created a ranking system for swordsmiths based upon cutting tests upon the bodies of criminals.

JAPANESE GENDAI SWORDSMITHS

Interestingly, Hawley lists him as working in Tokyo in 1950, which was during the prohibition imposed by the allies. There are some, however, who suggest that the sword was never truly a primary weapon that honor being shared more appropriately by the bow and the spear , but rather a sidearm for personal combat.
