Deep understanding allows for specific action to change lives. The global fight against these atrocities relies on a complex arsenal of human review and technology tools created in partnership with technology companies, child advocacy organizations and law enforcement. The perpetrator then seeks to form a friendship with the victim O'Connell, 2003.

NCMEC receives reports from around the world - and Europe is home to some of the most horrific. Ward Lutin, a migration expert at the EU asylum agency EASO, told reporters earlier this month that some families in Afghanistan sent out their children to Sweden or Germany in the hope of using family reunification rights to later join them in Europe. We found that, of the survivors who entered the life in the past decade, 75% reported being advertised online.
