The foundation was discovered in 1865 to be settling down; a vote of £500 was then passed to restore it; and an apprehension was entertained that a further vote might be required. Neither woman would accept this verdict, on the grounds that the king and parliament had acted ultra vires. Reconstruction of buildings in the principal business streets has, for several years, been very extensive.

Fortunately there is a document which provides hard evidence of a strong puritan presence in the upper reaches of City government. On 13 July 1439 he received license from Henry VI to give his house and lands already acquired to the Master and Fellows of Clare, also lands and advowsons worth £50 a year, for the support of a Chaplain and 3 scholars to be educated in grammar, to take the Master's degree therein and then to go and teach.
