The Political Economy of Kenya by Michael G. Schatzberg

Support to representative organisations including trade unions and farmers associations should be explored. How can donors contribute to governance reform in Kenya? This falls to a lower rate in 2010 probably due to the menace of the al Shabaab militia group 1. The study also aims to use these findings to suggest possible remedies or strategies to adopt in order to get rid of corruption from the region or significantly reduce it.

Perhaps the most notable misdoing on the part of the president himself was observed in the purposed falsification of the presidential results in 2007 that led to widespread violence across the county. Its ratings are however still among the highest in the world. This study therefore aims at establishing the effects of corruption on the political-economic development of Kenya, Ethiopia and Somalia thorough a quantitative survey, and thereby come up with possible strategies that these countries can adopt so as to better achieve their goals.

This has an implication that the economic growth is influenced by other factors besides the levels of Corruption in these countries. The country has maintained very low scores of CPI over the years that have seen it being ranked the most corrupt in the world on average. However, a comparison of the countries GDP-Real Growth over the same period seem to agree with their respective overall ranking by the annual CPI reports with Ethiopia, ranked 116 th , having a higher real GDP growth and Somalia, ranked 178 th, having the least real GDP growth.
