Glacier Monitoring of Greenland

Grønlands Geol Undersøgelse, 1—80 1988. These results clearly show that multiple threshold lakes may be needed to obtain a comprehensive history of ice marginal fluctuations of a larger ice lobe and that a single threshold lake record may not be sufficient to infer ice marginal fluctuations for a large part of the ice sheet. For 1902, 1913, and 1933, they use estimates of Anker Weidick, which are based on an expedition by Lauge Koch in 1913 and the topographic mapping campaign of 1933.
