Emerging first in CDD was the notion of local development focused on village leaders, which was seen as the basis on which villages could develop selfreliance and self-governance. If we can have such a base for our administration we will naturally be able to mobilize the people, to investigate crimes, and in general to direct the people more easily than in the past. Almost as unsuccessful have been attempts permanently to resettle upland slash-and-burn swidden farmers at lower altitudes, where they can engage in permanent agriculture.
