The fervour and directness of the appeal in most of them does not suggest composition in the cell, with no concrete hearers in view. How long beforehand God promised to bestow on him a son, and yet gave him none there and then, but for how many intervening years trials and temptations befell him! No one has ever taken more seriously the doctrine of the Fall than Macarius does.

When peace was restored, he was set free, and had a great name.

Fifty Spiritual Homilies of Saint Macarius the Egyptian (Illustrated)

Whence indeed could he fall, being lower than all? When he was thus seized, creation, which served him and ministered to him, was seized with him.

Fifty Spiritual Homilies. Homily 27 : Macarius of Egypt : The Stromata

In addition, it is claimed that the Messalians believed that God changed in different ways to unite with their souls, that the body of Christ was infinite as was his divine nature, that his body was at first full of devils which were driven out when the Logos united itself to his body, that they possessed clear knowledge of the state of souls after death, that they could read the hearts and desires of man, that man could equal God in virtue and knowledge.

The Fifty Spiritual Homilies

In 1562 a Latin translation by Picus was added; and in 1699 J. Outside of freedom there is no likeness to God; but it is realized only in living communion with him. There was given him also the gift of healings, and he not only drove away devils, but those who were bound hand and foot and had dreadful sufferings he would cure by the imposition of his hands.

Fifty Spiritual Homilies. Homily 50 : Macarius of Egypt : The Stromata

He says that he knew the Alexandrian, but that the other died a year before his own entrance into the Nitrian desert, which was about the year 390.

Fifty spiritual homilies of St. Macarius the Egyptian : Pseudo

Paul's words, he becomes one Spirit with them — soul into soul, so to speak, and hypostasis in hypostasis — so that the soul which is worthy of God and pleasing to him can live in renewal and experience immortal life and become the participant of imperishable glory. It is the power of resurrection, the reality of immortality, the illumination of holy souls, an affirmation of intelligent forces. One had a beard, the other the beginnings of a beard.
