Fuchi

The chudan no kamae guard is determined by the tsuba and the curvature of the blade. This is obviously an extremely aggressive gesture, since a fatal cut can be given in a fraction of a second thereafter see.

Fuchi

During the 1603—1868 there was peace in Japan so tsuba became more ornamental and made of less practical metals such as gold. Also, many blades dating back to earlier are today sold in such a format, along with modern-day reproductions; while most are purely decorative replicas, a few have functional blades. The cheapest ones are cast from zinc alloy, but are quite brittle and not suitable for a functional, cutting sword.
