With their collaboration he realised his plan to publish the Dadaist Mécano in addition to De Stijl. It can't be the paintings, because if you're honest you'll admit that the two men — almost direct contemporaries Van Doesburg was eight years younger and, for a while, close friends — did virtually the same thing in paint, although I suppose tiny detail is significant in such arcane matters: according to some commentators, Van Doesburg's daring introduction of the diagonal into his work was enough to cause a rift between the two men.

Avant

In August 1914 he was stationed, as a conscripted sergeant, in the region of Tilburg in the south of the Netherlands, not far from the Belgian border. In fact, Kassák had already been influenced by De Stijl — in 1920 his production of the cover of MA was inspired by the new look of De

Stijl, which van Doesburg and Mondrian had designed shortly before.
