Sri Lanka Overview

The public sector has historically been the employer of choice for the average graduate, due to lifetime employment and a pension. Although the study did not find evidence of overt discrimination, it found that gender stereotyping led to indirect discrimination in the hiring process.

The informal employment rate starts out at around 70 per cent for the 15-to-24-year-old cohort, then initially falls, but increases again to over 80 per cent for workers ages 55 and above. Way forward With a growing unemployment rate, Sri Lanka should rapidly start programs to address the unfavourable repercussions of the pandemic on the labour market. Whatever reform is possible within current political circumstance, it should be gradually implemented over a decade.

Direct labour with recognized qualifications to global job market

Public sector workers are also better remunerated; all this has led to biased incentives toward the public sector. Overtime Overtime will be due to be paid where a worker is necessitated to work beyond the prescribed hours of working. In addition, because pay is affected by how much job experience one has, women who leave employment to rear children suffer wage penalties for years after they re-enter the job market.

Health, Education & Labour

A similar scheme may be developed for importing Chinese teachers given a growing Chinese tourist and investor presence in Sri Lanka and a dearth of Chinese-speaking local workers and managers. President Rajapaksa also stated that the prime objective of sending workers abroad is not to earn foreign exchange but to provide them with a better standard of living.
