After setting the bomb's timer, two men—wearing hooded jackets, baseball caps and sunglasses—left the vehicle and walked to Cathedral Street, where a third man picked them up in the Ford Granada, which was later abandoned in Preston. Efforts at improvement before the bombing had in some respects made matters worse, cutting off the area north of the Arndale Centre — the exterior of which was widely unloved — from the rest of the city centre. In an effort to allay fears that Manchester's considerable Irish community might be subjected to reprisal attacks, Councillors and Martin Págel — leader and deputy leader of respectively — made a public visit to the Irish World Heritage Centre in.
