In the more than one hundred and fifty years of her colonial existence — despite protests, appeals and statutes—the inflowing tide from Africa had continued, so that out of a population of some six hundred thousand souls, over two-fifths were negro slaves. In addition to the foregoing, acknowledgments are gratefully made to a great company of librarians, lawyers, antiquarians, clerks of courts, custodians of private manu- scripts and others who have assisted the author in collecting from widely separated sections of the Union the mass of information from which he has drawn, in the preparation of this work. Are the just powers of governments to be measured by the consent of the governed? From the beginning it created alarm in the considerate and strengthened the sympathies of the free states with the slaveholder.
