Murphy, Walter F. 1929

By breaking with the objectivist assumption that political identities are always already constituted through a structural positioning in the economic realm, Weber viewed their formation as a political project, involving contingent, conflictual, and context-specific relations that unfold in the sphere of the symbolic. All three thinkers strove to reestablish its pivotal position as a distinct 10 Democracy and the Politics of the Extraordinary realm of human experience and as an independent domain of investigation with its own internal principles. If the Advance, the Rumely Company, or Mr.
