Ghost flights: The planes that disappeared just like Malaysia Airlines Flight 370

Flight MH370 is an international passenger flight which was scheduled to fly from Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia to Beijing, China. Gradually, out of the melting ice, came the remains of Stardust.

Ghost flights: The planes that disappeared just like Malaysia Airlines Flight 370

Few of those who went down with the aircraft were old enough to have children, so DNA matches are being made with more distant relatives, further complicating the work. This series of letters identified type of aircraft and country of origin and were used for this one aircraft and none other.

Star Dust falling : the story of the plane that vanished : Rayner, Jay, 1966

On arrival in Argentina, the military had denied our request to access the crash site via its strategic Refugio Plaza base at the entrance to the Santa Clara Valley. Sadly, for me he also fails to capture the remoteness, beauty, and ruggedness of the crash site and as a result, the book ends up as a rather arid account that is almost clinical in its presentation.

The Star Dust Mystery • Damn Interesting

The operator was expecting to land in a few minutes and probably had nothing on his mind other than putting away his headphones and taking time off in Santiago. In 1947 the trip from London to Santiago took five days and three plane changes to complete. In either case, they attempted to contact what they thought was the nearest airport, Valparaiso, not Santiago.
