Madame Tellier's establishment had put on quite a holiday look. The upstairs room was full by nine o'clock.

La Maison Tellier (short story)

Many of the earliest books, particularly those dating back to the 1900's and before, are now extremely scarce and increasingly expensive. It was the little girl, who was always used to sleeping in her mother's room, and who was afraid in her small attic. Part belle est faite aux ginguettes des bords de Seine ,notamment sur les berges peintes par les grands maîtres impressionnistes.

Madame Tellier was dressed in blue silk from head to foot, and had on a dazzling red imitation French cashmere shawl. Madame Tellier had succeeded in giving it such a respectable appearance, she was so amiable and obliging to everybody, her good heart was so well known, that she was treated with a certain amount of consideration.

At the school the girls ranged themselves under the Sister of Mercy and the boys under the schoolmaster, and they started off, singing a hymn as they went. The women exploded with laughter. Madame Tellier, who was on friendly terms with her customers, did not leave the room, and took much interest in what was going on in the town, and they regularly told her all the news.

Six or eight of them; always the same set, not fast men, but respectable tradesmen, and young men in government or some other employ, and they would drink their Chartreuse, and laugh with the girls, or else talk seriously with Madame Tellier, whom everybody respected, and then they would go home at twelve o'clock! They started off in the same way as they had come the day before, and the little white horse started off with his quick, dancing trot.
