The Barn at the End of the World: The Apprenticeship of a Quaker, Buddhist Shepherd by Mary Rose O'Reilley

If I hadn't seen it reviewed in a relatively obscure magazine, I never would've heard of it. Surrender -- 8 am in the sheep barn -- As if -- Facts -- Catching and slipping and shearing -- Green pastures -- Health food -- Shopping for coffee -- Choirs of Seraphim -- On call -- Nature -- Acceptance of the present -- Bound for Canaan -- The Shelagh -- Ordinary time -- Sweeping -- Is it necessary to have a plow? She is a seeker, and she finds truth in Quaker music and Buddhist meditation and the lives and deaths of animals she takes care of. You know where to go for it, though it will cost you.

Synopsis Deciding that her life was insufficiently grounded in real-world experience, Mary Rose O'Reilley, a Quaker reared as a Catholic, embarked on a year of tending sheep. Over and over, through the years, I had denied the deep peace that came to me in a barn full of animals. Anna takes the lambs to her local butcher two-by-two in a small van, because she believes the large cattle trucks frighten them.

Browser Compatibility Our audio books and Chrome aren't playing nicely right now, but we're on it. Again, O'Reilly is not a romantic and seems nonplussed by this, but I found it distressing to think of all the animals captive in our food chain and bred to the point that they are completely incapable of sustaining their own survival. But stand with someone you love, palm to palm, eyes closed, and sing a perfect fourth.
