Tur

Know further that it is only permitted to others if he specifically stands by his word that it was not slaughtered at all.

ShulchanArukh

Post facto his slaughter is permitted, for even if one did not pronounce a blessing at all his slaughter is valid, for blessings do not prevent the efficacy of an action, as I have written in chapter 19 see there. However, if the witness is known to fear G-d to a greater extent than the shochet - it is appropriate to rule strictly.

Arukh ha

This is an unusual stringency, and we do not find that such an enactment was ever promulgated in past generations. Therefore, we are able to disregard his claim without hurting his status of law-abiding citizenship, and the crops are still considered Tevel.

TurShulchanArukh

Since he does not know the laws, like the case of a minor, which will be explained later we are worried that he will invalidate the slaughter without realizing.
