Saints Cyril and Methodius

He adds Phoebus to this list, 'golden-crowned', as he calls him, then Tethys.

And the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. Yet will no one I deem suppose that the soul has the nature of the body as the beginning of its own existence, but God inplaces it ineffably in the body and it is born along with it; yet do we define as one the animal that is made up out of both, i. That which should have made possible for those people to understand fully the glory of God was lost, it is obvious from the account, in the pit of the deepest stupidity.

In fact he affirmed that God created the sky and the earth, the sun and the moon, the stars, light, animals which fly and those which swim, various brute beasts, the splendour of vegetation, edible fruit and the grass of the meadows. . And haply to call the holy doctors of the whole world false and liars, will do no harm? For that which indwells in another, becomes not that which it is wherein it dwells; but is conceived of rather as one thing in another.

St. Cyril of Alexandria: The Christological Controversy : Its History ...

We believe therefore, not in one like us honoured with Godhead by grace, lest we be caught worshippers of a man, but rather in the Lord Who appeared in servant's form, and Who was truly like us and in human nature, yet remained God, for God the Word, when He took flesh, laid not down what He was, but is conceived of the Same God alike and Man. As the Scripture inspired by God says, the men of that time should have had some idea of the Creator and maker of the universe from the beauty of things created.
