Removing reflections from glass?: Studio and Lighting Technique Forum: Digital Photography Review

Someone suggested that one could use a polarizing filter to remove the reflections.

Kodak Filters and Pola

But I love Pentax because it is so rugged and well sealed I can leave in on a beach. And IMHO, anything you put in front of your lens will diminish the quality of your picture, no matter how good your filter is. Here is a treatise on polarisers which includes a clear diagram of crossed polarisers as used for copying.

I have never done it to protect the lens from major injury e.

Filters

. You have to put filter on both camera and light s , then tune them rotate to the same angle.

Filters and pola

The increasing importance of Pola-Screens in modern photography called for an expansion of the Pola-Screen section.

Hi Thomas, The black cloth technique is the best if you can do it, but if the artwork is too big, another thing you can do is overpower the existing light by using a powerful strobe combined with a high shutter speed.

Filters

But if you take well care of your equipment you won't need filters for that purpose. Kodak books are available at both the beginner and advanced levels. Cross polarization eats up a LOT of light and it can be tough to see what you're doing
