silva

Statius' father is imagined as looking at the world from heaven and rejoicing in Elysium while Statius' grief intensifies. Statius compares himself to Homer and Virgil, describes the palace, and prays for long life for the emperor.

Acta Silvae et Ligni

Go on through the years and through The centuries, surpassing in fame those ancient glories. Like a flower fated to die at the first breath of adverse wind, Standing far too tall in the tender field, so that child, in looks And proud steps beyond his years, prematurely outdid his peers.

What We Do

He is every kind of writer I detest, a faux naïf, a Proust in greasy overalls, a dirty little boy with a piece of chalk and a board fence and nobody looking.

silvae

Die Zeitung berichtet ausführlich über alles, was bei der Einweihung des Soldatenfriedhofs von Gettysburg geschieht.
