art

Dash Winks These kaomojis use a dash character — to make the closed eye in their winks.

Kaomoji Emoticons List

Emoji images displayed on Emojipedia are copyright © their respective creators, unless otherwise noted. Whoever you thought of, send them one of these text emoticons. Maybe they are addressing a letter to something they think is an idiot? If they could even worry about something like that.

art

You can also use stars which for some reason signify winks. While they originated in Japan, Kaomoji emoticons are now used in many other countries as well.

snowflake

Travel + Leisure may receive compensation for some links to products and services on this website. Worried Japanese emoticons usually use ; to indicate a drop of sweat. The emoji and city pair with the most amount of votes in each category will win.

snowflake

Throw in some that are celebrating the festivities or skip on the emote altogether and just spice up the text with a whole bunch of sparkly, fancy characters.

art

This darkness shows the worry that they feel! You can get more ideas by looking at what are usually used for emoticon eyes, which can often be circles. Bling it out with stars and diamonds. Their handwriting must be pretty neat if this is what the words come out looking like! If you put the eyes close to the ground with characters such as a period.

snowflake

Play around with the open eye and the mouth to change up the emotion that is being tied to the wink. A lot of these are truly works of art. Who can you say thanks to right now? These emotes seem very bold since the star is solid and so is most of the flower.

KAYAK's New Emojis Just Made Travel Searching Way More Fun

You can make it look like an emoticon is saying it, but the words can really stand on their own if that is what you prefer.
