PRESENTATIONS

In general, when polymers are subjected to aging, two types of chemical reactions take place in the system: the first is chain scission, that is, fragmentation of long polymeric chains into short fragments and the second is the cross-linking of fragmented chains through macroradical formation followed by recombination of these macroradicals, leading to the formation of three-dimensional networks with an increase in cross-link density. In this study, an effort has been made to predict approximate lifetime based on two key properties: 1 % EB and 2 hydrophobicity measured in terms of contact angle.
