Ford Madox Brown

The blow was a terrible one to Madox Brown.

Ford Madox Brown's (Two Versions)

By 1840, when only his father survived, Brown first exhibited at the Royal Academy. Apart from the intrinsic worth of the picture, it has an historic interest of its own, in that it contains portraits of several of the members of the P. In the same way, his art is one of engaged observation rather than noisy propaganda.

Ford Madox Brown's (Two Versions)

The railings around the excavations separate the realm of productive work from that of leisure, lassitude and unproductive work. Later in the year Madox Brown writes : All the news that I know about myself and the artistic sphere generally I will keep you posted in with empressement. Following along behind is another well-dressed woman who offers a religious tract to one of the navvies.
