The challenges of implementing quality in the Irish hotel industry: a review, Managing Service Quality

In this scheme, people, either individuals or parties, own the rights to a place for a specific time period during the year. The high capital costs require that from the outset the project must be managed to achieve the most cost-effective use of resources applied to construction, furnishing and equipment, pre-operational expenses and finance.

The Marketplace of Life: Porter's Five Factor Model and the Hotel Industry:

You don't really need to 100% own the hotel, but the management will manage or franchise them. Getting to feel like you are living like a local and getting to know the local, is certainly a growing zeitgeist in tourism. What I love about Ireland is the culture but also how relaxed people are.

Real estate companies are often much smaller companies than hotel and motel operators and rather than being globalized, they are usually local to the property they develop, which reduces their financial muscle and ability to negotiate favorable contracts. With developing technologies and improved management skills, the hospitality industry is poised to grow in future as well.

Porter's Five Forces Model of Hotel Industry

When in a different country, people like to taste local cuisines. The largest hotel and motel operators are fairly well insulated from unpredictable market conditions by geographical diversification.
