Yeats, 'The Collected Poems of W. William Butler , 1865-1939: ', contrib. Because of a story I heard under the thin horn Of the third moon, that hung between the night and the day, To dream of women whose beauty was folded in dismay.

Nineteen Hundred and Nineteen

She collected money and patrons to launch the Irish Literary Theatre, the germ of the Abbey, in the autumn of 1898 with Yeats, Moore, and Martyn as directors. The family was able to spend the spring and summer of 1922 at Ballylee, idyllically happy with the place but mildly troubled by visits from detachments of the ragtag contending armies. Yeats wished to bring up his children in Ireland, and in early 1922 George Yeats found a house at 82 Merrion Square, an elegant address and close to everything that mattered in central Dublin.
