Unbroken Poetry (豆瓣)

In the empty supermarket aisles, the veil of civilization that covers the savage in all of us has thinned and frayed. In the case of the paintings, instability and indirectness are generated by the way they are painted as well as by images themselves. Style, accommodations, and cleverness, cannot replace the substance that is not there.

LW: Would you talk about one specific painting, perhaps The Other Shore 2017? For one thing, less certainty in what we are to the point of being uncertain that we are. Lilly Wei: I am intrigued by the title of your show, The Gypsy Camp. And every night you check on your desire to run. Martínez Celaya is the first Visual Arts Fellow of the Huntington Library, Art Museum, and Botanical Gardens, a fellow of the Los Angeles Institute for the Humanities, the first Visual Arts Fellow of the Robinson Jeffers Tor House Foundation, a member of the International Advisory Council of the Hispanic Society of America, and the artist advisor to the Anderson Ranch Arts Center, where he was also the 2007 recipient of its National Artist Award.

JOURNAL

During that impasse, and for the first time since I had started the climb, the twilight turned into night and the change brought with it the bitterest cold, which felt like a knife piercing my eardrums. The other life is nowhere and everywhere. The plan they forged over a fiery exchange was for her to come over the following night at eight.
