Frankfort, Kentucky

One brother and two sisters were killed in the tornado while Edna was blown 400 feet and was so injured that her little body was not strong enough to recover from the injury. With her arms tight around her husband's neck she held him back until the storm had passed. It was unclear whether blacks would be able to retain any of the property, but rumor flared anew among blacks across the South the next year at Christmastime—the end of the annual crop season—that plantation land everywhere would soon be distributed among them.
