Barnacles of British Columbia

Though there were the immediate deaths of many stars with the heat wave, Gehman is more worried about the long-term implications.

The federal government is expected to wrap up its case some time in November and then the First Nations will present theirs. Citizen scientists from Quadra Island and other areas describe sea stars that dried to a crisp after getting caught out in the tidal zone during the hot spell, said Gehman, a researcher with the University of British Columbia and the Hakai Institute.
