DIEPPE: Didn't Have To

The in the was a costly battle for the Allies. The Allies changed their view that capturing a major port was necessary to establish a second front; the damage inflicted on a port to capture it and by the Germans firing demolition charges would make it useless afterwards. The present site of the Fox Creek bridge holds historical facts which dates back to the 1800s.

The 1942 Dieppe Raid

For this reason, no records were kept but, after the Canadian authorities and the Chiefs of Staff had given their approval, I personally went through the plans with the , Admiral Mountbatten, and the Naval Force Commander, Captain J. This road went through farmland that had belong to the Leger family and intersected the old road Acadie Avenue that had taken travellers up and around Hall's Creek to the community of Lewisville to get to Moncton.

The forces attacked at five different points on a front roughly 16 kilometres long. The planners of the Dieppe Raid feared that unjustifiable civilian losses would anger and further alienate the Vichy government; an unattractive option considering the intent of Operation Torch not three months later. After the war, Jack Nissenthall shortened his surname to Nissen.
