Historical Researches Into the Politics, Intercourse, and Trade of the Carthaginians, Ethiopians, and Egyptians, Volume 2

Se- condly, how far does it agree with the infor- mation which has been given us by the ancients, upon the Egyptian methods of writing? Our only resource, therefore, is, to ascertain, as nearly as possible, by comparison, some of the principal events ; and to arrange the order of others, preceding or following them, in a general way ; not by years xiv PREFACE.

Here the great monuments are found near the river, and the whole plain to the Arabian mountain-chain is left for the town, which, according to Strabo, entirely filled it ". This however presupposes a familiar acquaintance with the Coptic language, with which I cannot flatter myself, and must therefore leave it to those who have made that language their study.
