Wu Jing (Han dynasty)

Detail of the gilded given by Emperor Wu to as an imperial gift; Emperor Wu also made attempts to try to intimidate Xiongnu into submission, but even though peace negotiations were ongoing, Xiongnu never actually submitted to becoming a Han vassal during Emperor Wu's reign. This made Emperor Jing angry and worried that if Liu Rong were to inherit the throne and Lady Li to become , many of his concubines might suffer the tragic fate of in the hands of .

Wu Jing (Han dynasty)

Emperor Wu's expenditures on these tours and magical adventures put a great strain on the national treasury and caused difficulties on the locales that he visited, twice causing the governors of commanderies to commit suicide after they were unable to supply the emperor's entire train. He roughly doubled the size of the Han empire of China during his reign, and much of the territory that he annexed is now part of modern China. After his patronage of poets familiar with the Chu ci style in the early part of his reign, Emperor Wu later seems to have turned his interest and his court's interest to other literary fashions.
