A General Theory of Emotions and Social Life by Warren D. TenHouten (Hardcover, 2006) for sale online

In an attempt to objectively assess the facial feedback hypothesis, Strack, Martin, and Stepper 1988 devised an experiment that would hide their true goals from the participants.

TenHouten, W. D. (2007). A General Theory of Emotions and Social Life. New York, NY Routledge.

According to the Cannon—Bard theory, emotional expression results from activation of the subcortical centers of the brain. Right or wrong, both decisions were based on what would physically happen to the man as a result of the act. It was a form of radium that a druggist in the same town had recently discovered.

These appraisals lead to different specific reactions in different people. Should the husband have done that? To this end, participants held a pen in their mouth in one of three ways: the Lip position would contract the orbicularis oris muscle, resulting in a frown; the Teeth position would contract the zygomaticus major or the risorius muscle, resulting in a smile; and the control group would hold the pen in their non-dominant hand.

The central question that the appraisal theory seeks to answer is why different people have different perceptions of and emotional reactions to the same situations. The man should steal the drug because life is more important than property. The optic thalamus, in particular, is a region that contains the neural organizations for different emotional expressions.

The drug was expensive to make but the druggist was charging ten times what the drug cost him to make. For instance, they might say he should break into the store, then everyone would think he was a good husband, or he should not because it is against the law.

A GENERAL THEORY OF EMOTIONS AND SOCIAL LIFE ROUTLEDGE ADVANCES IN SOCIOLOGY

TenHouten, this book presents an encyclopaedic classification of the emotions, describing forty-six emotions in detail, and presenting a general multilevel theory of emotions and social life. He wanted to find out how people decide what is right and what is wrong. I especially liked Tenhouten's systematic description of basic emotions and how they can be combined to describe secondary and tertiary emotions.
