The future of Ireland is urban

Because it is difficult to serve such development with public transport, problems are created in areas such as: air and water pollution, waste management, loss of rural landscape and excessive use of fossil fuels. The large towns 10,000+ persons with the oldest populations were Killarney, Wexford and Malahide while Balbriggan, Maynooth and Ashbourne were the youngest.

The future of Ireland is urban

It would take a brave politician to face down the obvious anti-urban bias in Irish political culture; or to question whether throwing resources at certain regions represents value for money for the State; or perhaps the inevitable tide of urbanisation should be accommodated rather than endlessly, and perhaps fruitlessly, opposed. Will government change the direction of spatial policy? Many of them still await high-speed broadband, essential for modern-day business and job creation.

But have they the courage to embrace it? Yet the drum to arrest this process continues to beat louder.

Ireland's inevitable tide of urbanisation

Difference 2011 Difference 2016 Monaghan -0. The policy supports the delivery of other key Government policies and objectives, with a focus on sustainable and inclusive rural development. It will optimise opportunities for individuals, communities and businesses, emphasising the potential for remote working to transform rural Ireland, with more people living and working in rural areas.
