

Play and meaning in early childhood education

Allyn and Bacon - Kids and Childhood: The Secret Power of Play

The characteristics of play

Drawing on the research of Dockett and Filer (1999), Shipley (2008) and Lester and Russell (2008) Dr Lennie Barblett put forward seven basic characteristics of play:

- Voluntary—something children choose to do, but other children can be invited to join in.
- Pleasurable—a deep sense of enjoyment, which will vary from child to child
- Symbolic—usually includes some type of make believe or pretend and objects assume new meanings and purposes for the player/s.
- Meaningful—to the player/s, but the meaning may not always be clear to an observer.
- Active—it requires active mental, verbal or physical engagement with people, objects or ideas.
- Process oriented—it's enjoyed for the activity itself, not concerned with an end product.
- Intrinsically motivated—It is its own reward.
