We were all thinking, all the time, all of our soils men all over the country, about how to interpret these surveys for practical use. Because of the spatial variability in these properties the idea of a uniformly distributed hydrophobic layer in a natural scenario is greatly over simplified and it is more likely that the development of water repellency is highly variable throughout a burn area. In its report for the de novo hearing, staff asserted that the visibility policies for the Rocky Point area required that the Project be entirely concealed if feasible.

Mistletoe State Park

McAllister contends that the exemption area policies were inapplicable. Under the circumstances, the record supports the Commission's findings that the Project had the potential to disrupt habitat areas and was, therefore, subject to the policies governing development in habitat areas.
