Passionate love letters that married poet Sir John Betjeman sent to secret mistress are unveiled

He is reported to have been selected for assassination by the IRA. Early Career Betjeman taught briefly at Heddon Court School, Hertfordshire, and then worked for a while as an insurance broker before becoming, in 1931, an assistant editor of the Architectural Review. His popularity was enhanced by a blank-verse autobiographical poem, Summoned by Bells 1960 , a quiet, introspective account of his first 22 years, and by two more verse collections, High and Low 1966 and A Nip in the Air 1975.

John Betjeman

His topographical writings, which celebrate actual places he loved and excoriate places he loathed, include Vintage London 1942 , English Cities and Small Towns 1943 , and First and Last Loves 1952. Just as he tirelessly opened our eyes to neglected architectural idioms so did he persuasively broaden our appetite for places.

Biography of John Betjeman

. On the contrary, whatever he did was technically specific to the medium. This is shown in many of his poems especially those about women.

Works of John Betjeman

In the licorice fields at Pontefract My love and I did meet And many a burdened licorice bush Was blooming round our feet; Red hair she had and golden skin, Her sulky lips were shaped for sin, Her sturdy legs were flannel-slack'd The strongest legs in Pontefract. Betjeman could also be trying to put across that those who are materialised and live in urban areas suffer with more health problems than those who live in rural areas with active outdoor jobs do.
