The Zone Of Insolvency: A Trap for the Unwary

No court involvement, so costs and time scales may be reduced and the nomination of liquidator is a matter for the members and the creditors. Under the logic of these decisions, corporate fiduciaries are under no obligation to liquidate a company even in the face of insolvency, and directors and officers of Delaware entities do not breach their fiduciary duties merely by trying to effect a strategy that, if it succeeds, will create value for creditors as well as shareholders by putting the company back in the black, even if it turns out that such strategy ultimately fails.
