Julian Cope: had to release Fried to prove I was still a functioning human

He moved to his right to a clearer space, And all his soul came into his face, Into his eyes and into his nose, As over the hill a murmur rose.

Reynard The Fox

Then last of all, at top of rise, The crowd on foot, all gasps and eyes; The run up hill had winded them

Reynard The Fox

The field took place Out of the way of hounds. His strength was broken, his heart was bursting, His bones were rotten, his throat was thirsting; His feet were reeling, his brush was thick From dragging the mud, and his brain was sick.

The wood hedge black was a two-year, quick Cut-and-laid that had sprouted thjck Thorns all over and strongly plied, With a clean red ditch on the take-off side. The people did rally to me, but I actually had to release those albums in order to prove to them that I was still a functioning human being. There he forgave Reynard for all of his sins after taking the scamp's promise that he would commit no more crimes against his fellow animals.

Reynard the Fox (Literature)

He is obsessed by the compulsion to surpass, a compulsion that blinds him to the necessary humanistic rituals required for survival. They seem to have originated in the Low Countries, northern France, and northeastern Germany, although precedence cannot be definitely assigned. Fifty-one titles were issued in the Broadway Translations series between 1923 and 1930.

Trickster

Hounds raced him here with all their might Along the short firm grass, like fire. Though his death seemed near he did not blench, He upped his brush and he ran the trench. In the mischief-maker is , who is also a shape shifter.
