Writing a Business Report
Writing Centre Learning Guide

Overview

- Start your report with the main point. Why is this report important? Why was it requested? What has it found?
- Explain the main content. Divide your information into blocks of topics.
- Give each block a title/heading.
- Begin each block with the main point. If your heading is a question, your first sentence should be an answer.
- Use detail, examples, data. Back up each main point with specific information and/or numbers.
- Give a recommendation. Call for action and point the way ahead. What should your client do next?

Structure

- Title Page: Title of your report, your name, student number and your course.
- Table of Contents: include headings, subheadings and page numbers.
- Executive Summary: brief summary of the report and gives your reader a clear idea of what your report says, without needing to read it. Start with the report's purpose, then give your scope.
- Introduction: summarises the issue or problem, its background and context, why it matters, why you're looking into it and the aim of the task. You can also introduce your approach and explain how you will go about solving the problem.
- Literature Review: Some reports require extra reading on the topic. This is where you research and write about other people's ideas about the topic, and how they relate to your own.
- Method: Explain how you did the research. Did you interview teenagers on consumer behavior? Explain who you interviewed, how many, and what you asked them. Did you conduct experiments? What were the variables? Did you use a questionnaire? Did you use a Likert scale? Did you investigate the market trends affecting teenagers in the past 20 years? Did you show numbers, graphs, charts and tables with your data?
- Conclusion: Summarise the findings. What are the main conclusions? What are the implications? Are there any recommendations? How can the findings be applied in practice?
- References: List all the sources of your information and why did you choose them?

Although the revised WAR program contains a practical component that was not available to students in the past, it was noted by both groups that work term placements would be beneficial for students to gain practical experience in the field.
