The Seven Deadly Sins: Jewish, Christian, and Classical Reflections on Human Psychology: Solomon Schimmel: 9780195119459

Being Jewish, therefore, is not so much accepting a faith system as is true with Christians, but being part of a covenanted community and peoplehood that one enters into at birth. Christians sometimes talk about trying to find the balance between immersing yourself in the world and isolating yourself in a comfy little bubble.

For , unlike classical Christianity, is what is called a non-exclusivist religion, meaning that it is the redemptive faith system for Jews.

New Perspectives on Jewish

Whereas in earlier times, there had been coexistence and harmony, by the fifth century much anti-Semitic legislation had been enacted. . Although our anger doesn't make most of us murderers, our lust doesn't make most of us rapists, and our greed and envy don't make most of us outright criminals, they, together with gluttony, arrogance, and sloth, often make us, and those who have to live with us, miserable.
