Ghadir

The 57 states' contribution to science globally amounts to no more than 1 per cent and is generally of lower quality. Any other use of the hosted content, such as for financial gain, requires express approval from the copyright owners. Nizamiyah colleges were established in major cities under the control of the Abbasids or Seljuks rulers who were nominally loyal to the Abbasids , including Baghdad, Isfahan, and areas where Shiites formed majorities at the time such as in Basra and the Syrian region of al-Jazira.

The decline of Islamic scientific thought: Don't blame it on al

Thanks to his unparalleled mastery of falsafa and Islamic theology, he injected repugnance among Muslims for science that ultimately led to its decline and, in the process, the decline of Islamic civilisation. Al-Ghazal's critique of falsafa was in fact meant to encourage critical thinking.
