Some theories of justice seem to imply that justice is always a comparative notion — for example when it is said that justice consists in the absence of arbitrary inequality — whereas others imply that it is always non-comparative. Sunil Kumar Agarwal Abstract The effects of international law on the domestic legal order on various countries of the World are manifold. If justice requires equality only by default, it might seem to apply only in a narrow range of cases.

The HRA implements the European Convention on Human Rights ECHR in UK law. He suggests that egalitarian principles of distributive justice are what justifies the imposition of coercive political authority on autonomous agents. So in contrast to Gauthier, it is no longer simply a case of self-interested contractors negotiating their way to an agreement.
