Other theories are really only frameworks of concepts, not coherent deductive systems of hypotheses and empirical propositions. Motorcycle riders may be more experienced; on the contrary, a motorcycle is capable of going at a higher speed than a moped. Confounding factors are all factors that could have similar effects to those of the causal factor of interest.

Literature Survey and Meta-Analysis 23 statistical weight of the natural logarithm of each effect estimate is the inverse of its variance: $w_i \propto 1/v_i$ The variance of the logarithm of the OR is $v_i \propto 1/(1 + 1/\sum_{j=1}^4 A_j)$ where A, B, C and D are the four numbers that enter the calculation of the estimate of effect. Statistical weights are estimated on the basis of the recorded number of accidents.

Handbook of Road Safety Measures

The strong focus of causal accident theory on human errors led, in the 1950s, to a misplaced emphasis on trying to modify human behaviour as the only effective measure to prevent accidents. A total of 128 road safety measures are included. Against this background, some people might think that road accidents are gradually becoming a less serious problem in the world as a whole.
