Arago

Among Arago's many contributions to the support of the undulatory hypothesis, comes the experimentum crucis which he proposed to carry out for measuring directly the velocity of light in air and in water and glass. He has a penchant for slouching. In order to combine the measurements it was necessary to compare the geodetic standards of length used in the different countries.

Arago

They extrapolated from this measurement the distance from the to the which was 5 130 740. The service was his ambition, and in 1804, through the advice and recommendation of , he received the appointment of secretary to the.
