In the domain of comparative and superlative suppletive morphology, this constraint can be illustrated by the following patterns. Greenberg, in his monograph on language universals 1966 , discusses the criteria used by Trubetzkoy and Jakobson for markedness, but then proceeds to link them to universals, without commenting on the inconsistency with structuralist principles. Linguistic cognitive abilities represent an individual's knowledge of linguistic convention, which is a coordination device for communication, which in turn is a coordination device for joint action.
